Weather conditions and general forecast:
The depressions which covered Lake Superior and the vicinity of the North Carolina coast Friday morning have evidently foined forces off the zouthern New England coast. Nothing of consequence resulted, except a little rain in the middle Atlantic states, lower lake region and upper Ohio valley. During the past twenty-four hours there was also light rain in the middle Mississippi valley and light snow in the upper lake region.

Temperatures have fallen 4 degrees to 24 degrees from northern Texas northeast-Temperatures have fallen a degrees to 24 degrees from northern Texas northeastward through the upper lake region, with a cold wave in the northern portion of the latter district. Warnings of this cold wave were issued Thursday night and Friday morning. In the Atlantic and gulf states and northwest temperatures have risen considerably, the rise in the latter district ranging from 25 degrees to 45 degrees. This unseasonably warm weather is a result of a marked depression which is central in Alberta this morning.

Generally fair weather is indicated tonight and Sunday in the southwest and east of the Mississippi river, except in Maine, where snow is likely tonight.

It will be colder tonight from the eastern lower lake region eastward, and warmer Sunday from the southwestern states northeastward into the western lower lake region.

On the Atlantic coast winds will be fresh on the Atlantic coast winds will be fresh and mostly northerly.

Cold wave signals are displayed at North-
